

HELP STOP FORECLOSURES: SUPPORT JUDICIAL MORTGAGE MODIFICATION

March 13, 2009

Dear Senator:

Last week, the Obama Administration unveiled the details of a comprehensive set of initiatives to help millions of American homeowners and reduce the massive wave of foreclosures that lie at the root of today's economic crisis. The plan recognizes that voluntary industry-led programs to avert foreclosures simply have not yet worked. Therefore, the Administration is putting in place a coordinated set of options and incentives to servicers and investors to prevent avoidable foreclosures.

An essential part of the Obama Administration plan supports congressional action to permit distressed homeowners to seek home loan modifications in bankruptcy court. That is the same option that is permitted today for virtually every other type of debt in both consumer and business bankruptcy cases. Legislation to accomplish this critical part of the plan, S. 61 ("Helping Families Save Their Homes in Bankruptcy Act"), will be considered soon by the full Senate. Just last week, the House of Representatives, in a bipartisan vote, approved a companion measure (H.R. 1106). A key provision of both measures: allowing for judicial mortgage modification. This will be the most reliable way to encourage loan servicers to offer sustainable mortgage modifications outside of court.

We are writing today to reiterate our support for this legislation. S. 61 represents a valuable tool, at no cost whatsoever to the taxpayer, for stopping foreclosures and stabilizing the economy by providing homeowners access to court-supervised mortgage modifications. The proposed legislation will not excuse families from paying their mortgage. Rather, it will give judges the authority to modify unaffordable loans for families who are facing foreclosure and cannot obtain an affordable voluntary modification. Lenders would receive more, not less, than they would receive if foreclosure took place.

And there is a bigger case to be made for this common-sense reform: We can't end the financial crisis without stemming the rising tide of foreclosures. Court-supervised loan modification for all mortgages, and not just subprime loans, is an essential component of an effective and comprehensive plan to meet that challenge. Clearly, the foreclosure crisis extends beyond the subprime loans where it started and now reaches the homes of millions of mostly middle-class homeowners with traditional, prime mortgages, as well as Alt A loans. (See attached document explaining why it is so important that the Senate not limit judicial mortgage modifications to subprime loans.) Recognizing that the original subprime mortgage crisis now has spilled over to home mortgages in general, the Senate should sync its remedy with the Obama initiative, which applies to all mortgages, to provide the strongest possible incentive for voluntary modifications.

At a time when an estimated 6,600 families are losing their home to foreclosure each and every day, there is no time for delay. We urge the Senate to act immediately to pass legislation, without weakening amendments, to lift the ban on judicial modification of primary residence mortgages. It is perhaps the most important thing we can do right now to help arrest the terrible toll that the recession is taking on American families.
